The Triathlon
By Daniel Salamanca, MAS Personnel Coordinator

The USSOCOM Warrior Care Program has historically been involved with providing triathlon opportunities to our military adaptive sports athletes, most notably, through our Nike Triathlon Camps. MAS athletes visit the prestigious athletic facility and corporate headquarters in Beaverton, Oregon, where world class athletes from all sports train and strengthen their mind and body. We hope to continue this amazing opportunity in the near future as conditions become safe for everyone regarding COVID-19.

As the physical conditioning battlespace changes in the world around us, more and more entities are moving their training efforts online and into the digital space where athletes can connect and interact with one another anytime from around the world. Virtual camps, clinics, and competitions are becoming the new “track” or “gym” where athletes can come together, collaborate, and compete in the name of good sportsmanship.

One thing is for sure, these are certainly different times, but “different” doesn’t have to mean “scary” or impede the physical and mental goals we set for ourselves. If there’s thing we know how to do as SOF members, it’s “understand and adapt to the operational environment”.

The background on the origin of the triathlon from Encyclopedia Britannica:

A “triathlon” is defined as a three-part sports discipline comprising swimming, cycling, and running. The three sports are contested as a continuous event without any rest in between each discipline. The triathlon can be an individual or team event over varying distances.

The history of the Triathlon dates back to the early 1970s in San Diego. It was originally designed to be an alternative to hard track training. The very first triathlon event was held on September 25, 1974. The triathlon then comprised a 10 km run, 8 km cycle, and 500 m swim. In 1989, the sport was awarded Olympic status and featured for the first time at the 2000 Sydney Olympics in Australia. Since then, the sport has grown in popularity. In fact, no other sport achieved Olympic status in such a short time. Over the next decade, the triathlon grew by leaps and bounds and soon gained recognition worldwide and the official distance for the triathlon was set at a 1500 m swim, a 40 km cycle, and a 10 km run—taken from existing events in each discipline already on the Olympic program.

Sports and Wellness Corner:

Even though we may not be able to get together in these uncertain times, USSOCOM coaches want you to know you can still move your body and train and calm the mind. They’ve provided us some great sport and wellness videos to show you just how you can do it at or near your home!

FIELD INTRODUCTORY TRAINING

Let’s throw something! This Field Introductory Training video describes the equipment and proper form for holding and throwing of the shot put, discus, seated shot put, and seated discus. It also includes the benefits of each throwing event and the main focus/skill used during each throw. Please don’t let not having access to the appropriate equipment hinder your training as other household options are available! Additional field training videos will be sent out throughout the month, so be sure to check those out!

TRACK INTRODUCTORY TRAINING

Whether you’re a competitive runner or looking to improve your runs, you’ll enjoy this Track Introductory Training video focused on dynamic warm-ups. There are multiple suggested exercises like arm swings and fast feet drills to assist you in your running goals! These exercises are best to do while warming up and will assist in elongating muscles, stimulating your nervous system and helping to reduce risk of injury. Don’t forget to cool down with stretching and keep a look-out for more track videos this month focused on strategy, strength and conditioning and specific competition skills!

MEDITATION TO CALM THE MIND

Feeling stressed? Can’t sleep? Meditation to Calm the Mind is considered an Autogenic training, which is a relaxation technique that can be really helpful if you’re dealing with a lot of stress or anxiety. It can also be used to assist in falling asleep. Over the next three months we’ll be sending out different wellness videos focused on goal setting and healthy habits, performance through mindfulness and improving mobility training through chair yoga.
